

Learning from Your Ancestors

You can learn a lot about money from your parents and grandparents, and from stories of your ancestors. Ask these questions of one of your parents or grandparents (or someone who knows a lot about your family history). When you finish, ask another parent or grandparent these same questions.

1. How did you get money as a child?
  2. How did you spend money as a child?
  3. How did you save money when you were a child?
  4. What money mistakes did you make when you were a child?
  5. What stories have you heard about the way our ancestors used money?
  6. What's the most important tip you learned about using money well from your parents?
  7. What do you hope I'll learn about using money well?
  8. What do you hope I'll teach my kids about using money well?
