

Making a Difference through Giving

How much you give is not as important as whether you give. Look at this list of ways to help others with your money. Circle those you have done in the past. Place a star next to what you'd like to do next.

|---|---|
| Help with a fundraiser. | Buy an item that others sell to raise money. |
| Buy a card, a flower, or some small gift to give to someone who's having a hard time. | Pitch in money to buy a group present for someone. |
| Give money to someone without expecting the person to pay you back. | Donate money to a cause before anyone asks you to. |
| Give money to a cause you believe in. | Treat someone to an ice cream cone, coffee, or soda—just for fun. |
| Give money to a church or mosque. | Donate money to someone doing a fundraiser. |
| Give money to a good cause. | Volunteer your time to help someone. |

If you like to focus on quantity, think about the total number of experiences you can create for yourself to give money away. Do this instead of thinking about the amount you give each time. For example, some people prefer donating money to five different organizations (even though they may give only $2 to each organization) instead of choosing just one.
